

Peer feedback, Jessica Murdock

Michael Gardone:

- Preparation: Gardone was always ready to go whenever we had meetings and had plenty to add to the discussion. He also sent occasional simple text updates over Discord.
- Contribution: He contributed a lot to the project itself, putting in the navbar and writing all the code for the reader breakdown page. He also took the time to communicate his plans for when he would work on the project and his own self-imposed deadlines for getting specific tasks done, so that we could manage our time well.
- Respect: He always encouraged discussion of our options and possible new designs we could try, and offered respectful constructive criticism if he had any concerns.
- Flexibility: He was always prepared to have an open, respectful discussion in the event of disagreements, and gladly took constructive criticism for his own ideas and designs.

Jessica Murdock (self-assessment):

- Preparation: I made sure to be on time to meetings, with ideas and issues ready to discuss. I also sent occasional simple text updates over Discord.
- Contribution: I contributed a lot of work as well, writing everything for the home page and formatting all of our sources for the sources page. I also made sure to communicate my schedule so that Gardone knew when I planned to work on the project and on what, so between the two of us, I think we did a good job with time management.
- Respect: It's always good to hear out others' ideas, so I always listened to any ideas Gardone had and asked for his feedback on my own.
- Flexibility: an open, calm and respectful discussion is always a priority for me, especially during disagreements.